Short description

The International Conference addresses the issue of living in an inclusive point of view, considering the inclusive approach as necessary to guarantee an autonomous and independent life to fragile people (young, adults and elderly) with health or disability problems that limit their autonomy in the so-called Activities of Daily Living (ADLs), both basics and instrumentals.

The initiative is promoted by the Environmental Accessibility Cluster of the Italian Society of Architectural Technology (SITdA).

The topic is central for a broad network of different sector, among them all, the scientific research, industrial production, but also local policies: all stakeholders aware of ethical, social and economic importance in order to guarantee living autonomy to people who live everyday life spaces with different needs due to age, physical abilities (sensory and cognitive), education, culture and experiences.

Organized by the research teams of University of Udine, luav of Venice and Roma Tre University that belong the Environmental Accessibility Cluster, the International Conference "Inclusive Living" is aimed at collecting and discussing contributions from researchers, professionals and third sector about research experiences and design experiments which, inside the complex area of inclusive design for accessibility, health, well-being and safety of living spaces, contribute to satisfying specific and targeted users needs through advanced technologies for the composition of spaces, creation of objects and organization of facilities.

The International Conference will be an opportunity for theoretical and informative discussion, aimed at expanding knowledge, presenting itself as a place of exchange and comparison. In this sense, the call for paper intends to select and publish contributions from

Thematic sessions

With regard to the theme of inclusive living, proposals will be received for three sessions that refer to different scales of architectural design:

SMALL - industrial and production design;
